Strongly agree		Yes		I believe that this is a great tool to use. It will allow the officers to view exactly what they have done to bring the offender back in compliance before writing to the court. Having all your sanctions in location, it will save the officer's time. In the past, I have had to view case notes that sometimes date back to a year of supervision to see what has been done or what hasn't been done. This tool will certainly save officers time and make managing their caseloads easier.

The "History of Supervision" was barely several small paragraphs that included demographic and job info but not much else (other than required criminal history and such). That is not how we were taught as cadets to write a VOP. I feel that is an issue with individual officers AND their supervisors for approving such a weak report. I think graduated sanctions would be most beneficial for those

Suggestion:
Should Graduated Sanctions be populated in Progress reports, Admin's and VOP reports so the sentencing authority can gauge the degree of the violation as a whole, to observe if the proper intervention (Graduated Response) was used to exibit compliance or for a Clear History of Supervision for compliance vs. noncompliance.
